Prairie Hiking Club Visits New Lenox

In fair weather or foul, members of the Prairie club of Chicago keep their date with nature. This was demonstrated last Sunday morning, April 7, when a group of hikers from that organization alighted at New Lenox from a special coach on the Rock Island suburban train, and despite the inclement weather, began their walk from that community to Joliet.

The Prairie club members were met at the station by a delegation from the New Lenox club, including the president, R. M. Whitaker, W. E. Feurer, Secretary, S. F. Sergeant, Chairman of the reception committee, and Frank LaRocco. Mr. Sergeant braved the elements with the group and accompanied them on their hike, which covered a winding trail along the banks of the meandering Hickory Creek, past the well-known Pilcher Arboretum, where they viewed some of the most famous exhibitions of cacti in the Middle West. After an outdoor lunch in the shelter at Pilcher Park, they then continued on into the city of Joliet, returning to Chicago on Rock Island train No. 290, leaving there at 5:25 p.m.

The Prairie club organization was established in 1911, and boasts a membership of over 900 persons. The organization has three permanent camps located in Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois; the Illinois camp being situated at Palos Park. Anne McClure and Joseph O. Lange acted as leaders of the group on their walk Sunday.

CIVIC ASS'N. VARIETY SHOW FILLS AUDITORIUM

True to its name the Variety Show sponsored by the Mokena Civic association of Mokena at the school auditorium last Friday evening was a variety in every sense of the word. The program consisted of many musical numbers played by the newly organized Mokena Civic orchestra.

Stokes Nebeker as master of ceremonies did a very creditable job and we have to hand it to him for having been a very versatile M. C. In his own inimitable way he introduced each member of the orchestra to the audience. Frank Hirsch Jr. directed. Many of the old time songs and instrumental numbers were featured.

All of the numbers presented were heartily enjoyed. Among the special numbers were a saxophone trio played by Paul Meyers, Richard Kohl and Norville Robinson. They played in harmony and it sounded very beautiful.

George Hachlein made a great hit with his bone jangling number. He is an artist in that line. Another most enjoyable number was the instrumental duet played by Rene Guindon on the tenor banjo and his brother-in-law Leo Wellner of Joliet on the electric Hawaiian guitar. They also made a hit with the audience. Another outstanding act was one by Harland Merrell, foreman of the News - Bulletin office. He portrayed the eccentric character of the famous violinist and went through many side-splitting antics until he finally gave his musical rendition. The stage and scenery, were made very effective by the special music stands and the excellent stage lighting, in charge of Harold Balaz, stage electrician.

The famous Mokena trio consisting of Walter Olson, Stokes Nebeker and Frank Hirsch Jr. sang several very pleasing selections especially the one where the saxophone player got off key and was subsequently shot by Stokes Nebeker the M. C. He promised to never do it again. A great many surprises were shown by the local talent of Mokena. The biggest surprise came to light when Joe Hayden gave his story telling of a Jewish merchant and a character study of a poker player. It was realistic according to the poker players in the audience who enjoyed it immensely.

The closing number was a very beautiful portrait in living pictures of Abraham Lincoln by John Awalt, a sailor by Byron Nelson and two soldier boys, by Wm. Myrick and Fred Steinhagen. The trio sang "God Bless America," after which the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner," both being presented from back stage. At the close the orchestra played five numbers for a dance which was enjoyed by all.

Following are the members of the orchestra and instruments they play:

Director: Frank Hirsch.
Saxophones: Richard Kohl, Paul Myers, Norval Robinson.

Brass: Beryl Needham, Clifford Mahoney, Roy Kohl.

Tenor Banjo: Rene Guindon.
Violin: Lawrence Kohl.

Hawaiian Guitar: Leo Wellner.
Piano: Andrew Bueschel.

Drums: Louis Ebert.

LAMB CHOPS EN CASSEROLE MAKE A "BUSY-DAY DINNER"
(See Recipes Below)

Busy-Day Meals

There's something about the first warm, sunny days of spring that makes a woman don her working clothes, roll up her sleeves and get started on house cleaning.

In spite of all the work involved, spring cleaning does give your spirits a lift. And it's very apt to spur you on to such heights that unless you've planned your cleaning campaign with all the finesse of an army general, the end of house cleaning is likely to find you with a shining, immaculate house, but an exceedingly weary body and a very disturbed family! But with a definite plan of action to guide you, even your meals can be served on schedule, and they can be good meals; a simple meal with a hot main dish that can be partly prepared the day before, is one solution to the problem of how to keep your family well fed and happy even at house cleaning time.

Plan a meal that requires little watching, one that is easy to serve and one that won't be spoiled if it isn't eaten on the stroke of 12:00. Serve the meal "help-yourself-style," using paper plates and napkins, because these are the things that make hot meals practical even in the thick clean-up by flying brooms and dust mops.

You'll find worthwhile suggestions for busy-day meals, below.

Spanish Roll.

Round steak, 2½ inches thick
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 small can mushrooms
1 medium onion (cut fine)
1 green pepper (cut fine)
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
4 whole cloves
Dash of allspice
½ teaspoon salt
Noodles

Dredge steak with flour and sear on both sides. Place in casserole, and add tomatoes, mushrooms, onion, green peppers and seasoning. Cover and bake about 2½ hours in a slow oven (300 degrees). Half an hour before serving, boil some noodles in salted water. Drain. Place steak on large platter, surround with noodles, and cover with the sauce.

Soften the butter by creaming. Then add sugar, unbeaten eggs, milk, flavoring extract, and the dry ingredients which have been sifted together. With a rotary beater or electric mixer, beat for 2 or 3 minutes, or until the batter is light and very smooth. Pour into greased pan 8 by 8 by 2 inches deep, and cover evenly with the following mixture:

THE MIND READER

By PHYLLIS GALLAGHER
McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

JEANNE rested her auburn curls against the chair back and closed her lovely jaded eyes. In a moment Jim Chamberlain would return to the observation platform with the cigarettes and she would tell him something that would—startle him!

With her eyes closed like that the memory of the last six days, the happiest of all her eighteen years, swept through her mind with the clarity of the swiftly passing scenery to an open gaze: Great, bronzed Jim Chamberlain playing a magnificent center for Navy; an exchange of glances in the crystal reflected whiteness that is the Edgewater hotel's dining room; the rich quality of Jim's voice, when he had dared to speak without an introduction, that suited the black eyes and the dark hair with its not-too-damaging wave; the last night of Jim's special leave, when he had said, "I dread tomorrow . . . leaving you. It's strange how a fellow can care so much in so short a time." Then she had laughed, "But, Jim, I'm leaving Chicago tomorrow, too . . . on your train! You see . . . I . . . live in Washington."

Jim had snapped his slender fingers and his eyes had sparkled. "Can you beat that! But how was I to know? . . . You've told me so little about yourself. Imagine having you close enough for week-end hops . . . until I get my commission. That's June, dear . . . this June! A midshipman can't marry but an ensign can . . . that's if his girl will have him!"

Was it her heart beating at that memory or the train's wheels, clicking off miles to the East, that sent the blood pulsing jerkily in her temples?

"You wouldn't go to sleep, would you, Jeanne?"

Jim slouched to the chair at her side and proffered a cigarette case. "Now, what's this so important thing you were going to tell me?"

Jeanne pulled the raccoon coat close about her throat and looked into Jim's bright gaze.

"I'm . . . a mind reader, Jim," she said, seriously.

"What-at?"

The cigarette case almost dropped from his fingers.

"Don't let me wear a turkish towel around your head and sit in a tent with a fish-bowl upside down to gaze in!"

He didn't believe her. His first shock had melted into a gaminish grin.

So Jeanne said, with all the dignity she could muster, "But I am, Jim! I can prove it by telling you that you're an only son, that you're twenty-one, that you almost missed getting into the Naval academy on account of your front tooth which you cracked sledding, that . . ."

The grin faded, but not entirely. "Aw-w, cut it! You've been reading football stuff! Don't you suppose, woman, that I could spot a mind reader if I met one? They look . . . greasy!"

He glanced swiftly at the slim legs and the silk skirt that flowed as close as water over graceful knees.

"They wear gobs of petticoats, too! But say! . . . if you are a mind reader tell me what I'm thinking this minute . . . no blushing allowed!"

He thrust his handsome amused face under her grave one.

"Jim, I'm not fooling!"

"I know!" he drew back. "You can't read my mind unless you go into a trance and foam at the mouth. All right then, tell me something out of my past . . . not the stereotyped newspaper drivel of how the Navy would sink without me!"

Jeanne bit her lower lip. "You like blackberry pies best of everything to eat," she said, her pale cheek half averted. "You loved a girl named . . . Janice Klingie, I think, when you were in grammar school and you shot her in the face with a water pistol when you dropped a box of candy in her lap for her birthday, on account of your bashfulness . . . then. You had a toy boat you used to sail in the bathtub at Pudge Wilson's house and when you pulled a string the boat would blow up in a hundred pieces. And when Pudge Wilson's little sister would cry because you wouldn't let her put it back together again, you would say, 'Beat it, beat it . . . beat it!'"

Jim's eyes magnified with surprise. "Saa-y! Are you a mind reader . . . really?"

The jade eyes met his stare, unflinchingly.

"Yes, Jim . . . really."

Jim moved away as if suddenly afraid of her.

"It's swell . . . to be a fortune teller," he said. "Takes talent . . . and gosh! . . . think of all the tips on the races and things. But having a wife who could read your mind . . . why! . . . why, it would make a fellow feel like he was walking through the streets in his shorts."

Jeanne's eyes were screwed into a tangle of long lashes. "Were you thinking of marrying a mind reader, Jim?"

"You're asking ME!"

His lower lip protruded in disgust.

"That is a laugh! Why don't you tell me . . . you're the fortune-teller!"

"All right, I will!" she said, with a decidedly professional air.

"You are thinking of marrying one but right now you're wondering how it will work out when she can see into your thinking processes! But you love her, Jim, and you're going to ask her to marry you . . . June week. I'm not saying that she'll accept! She's the type of girl who expects to be loved . . . even if she has smallpox . . . or can read minds!"

Jim's brows darted together and he reached for her slim, gloved hand.

"You're right, Jeanne. I do love you. I do want you to marry me. . . . June week. You've got to accept . . . darling."

A third voice came from the Pullman door and Midshipman Pudge Wilson spoke above the grinding of the wheels. "Nice work, Chamberlain! Technique! And all that sort of thing. You need nothing but that Gable ogle and a dash of Ben Blue in the hand movement!"

And then to Jeanne, whose face was deepening to the color of her rouged lips: "Say, sis, Jim would make a heck of a husband! . . . he bites the buttons off his shirts to keep his teeth sharp!"

Then he was gone.

Jim rose to his impressive six feet, his lips drawn in a fine line. "YOU . . . Pudge Wilson's sister!" he said, coolly. "And Pudge spouting ever since Plebe year what a conceited, stuffed-duck, ego-blimp of a bust you thought I was! You just made a play for me at Edgewater hotel when I didn't recognize you . . . all slick as a peeled egg out of finishing school. You didn't care for me at all . . . everything you said that night and since were just lies . . . like this mind-reading bunk . . . just to make a sap of me!"

Jeanne was on her feet, her nervous little fingers tugging at the brilliant brass of his buttons.

"I did it on purpose," she confessed, lifting appealing eyes to his angry ones.

"I made Pudge stay in the background, too, when you visited me at Aunt Matilda's. He would pop out now and spoil the fun of telling you myself. That's Pudge . . . the bum!"

Jim turned a disinterested profile, but Jeanne went on: "I didn't do this to make a sap of you, Jim, but to get even with you for all the years you called me 'brat,' for all the years you looked right smack at me and through me when I was languishing at your feet and sleeping with your picture under my pillow! No wonder you didn't recognize Pudge's freckled, red-headed brat of a kid sister! . . . you hadn't seen me before! Why, Jim Chamberlain . . . I . . . I was raised on loving you!"

"Jeanne! You . . . you brat!" he said, tenderly, and his arms caught her to him until the brass buttons hurt against her breast. There were ways . . . and ways . . . she thought, vaguely, beneath his kiss . . . of being called "brat."

Historic Spots of South

Will Become Memorials

MEMPHIS.—The forts and battlefields where thousands of Southerners died during the Civil war may be turned into a series of parks and memorials throughout the Mississippi valley.

F. Marion Rust, superintendent of the Dr. Thomas Walker park at Harboursville, Ky., has started to get various states in the area interested in the projects.

"Eastern seaboard states long ago developed their historic spots," Rust said. "By doing that, they added an important source of wealth and deepened the interest of tourists. But states along the Mississippi have been negligent."

Rust told of a trip down the Mississippi, looking for Civil war battle sites.

"At Island No. 10, where a really great battle was fought, little or nothing of the once vast earthworks could be found," he said. "At Fort Pillow, Tenn., however, an immense fortification still was intact."

"Most interesting point was at Fort Wright near Randolph, Tenn., where the earthworks are almost intact and in good condition. The underground brick, double-barrel powder magazine, probably the only one left in the country, and the great military cistern built by Confederate troops to guard against possible water shortage, still are in fairly good repair."

"The Fort Wright area would lend itself to a beautiful memorial park," he said.

Rust believes that at least two more battlefields in the vicinity of Vicksburg, Miss., should be memorialized in connection with the military park there. These two, he said, would be Haynes Bluff on the Mississippi where Gen. William T. Sherman had his forces cut to pieces and Champion Hill where Pemberton lost to the Federal army.

"The old town of Port Hudson, La., is no more," Rust said. "But from maps, we found actual gun positions. That nothing has been done to memorialize the ruins there is almost unbelievable."

Seventy-Three Years of Taxes

B. C. Lancaster, 93, recently paid taxes for the seventy-third consecutive year on a farm near Sterrett, Texas. He has been a resident of Ellis county since his arrival in 1854 in a covered wagon. At the close of the Civil war, he borrowed money from his father, purchased the Sterrett farm and has owned it since.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

A MOTHER writes: "I have enjoyed using the embroidery stitches in SEWING Book 2. I find a great deal of pleasure in handwork for the dresses of my little five-year-old, and am particularly interested in smocking."

Here is a trick that is useful for making honeycomb smocking in points without a special pattern. The fullness of any dress may be basted into tucks of graduated length, as at A. Even a little fullness in the center front or at the neckline may be smocked in one or two points. Always baste the center front tuck first and then work each way from it. The smocking starts at the left and is done with colored thread. Begin at the top of the second tuck. Catch it to the tuck at the left with three stitches. Work from the top down along each tuck as shown. The stitch at B is made by sliding the needle along inside the tuck.

NOTE: If you like to do handwork you will want a copy of Mrs. Spears' Book 2. It contains directions for making 42 embroidery stitches with their authentic names. Also illustrations of five processes of mending fabrics; making doll clothes, and gift items. Books are 10 cents each—please order by number—No. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Each book contains an assortment of 32-pages of curtains; slip covers; rag rugs; toys; gifts and novelties for bazaars. With your order for four booklets you will receive a FREE set of three Quilt Block patterns of Mrs. Spears' Favorite Early American Quilts. Send orders to:

Lowly Maggot an Aid

To Flower Breeders

USE of the loathsome maggot in the development of more lovely flowers for the gardeners of the world constitutes a little-known phase of the science of flower breeding.

Often in his work the flower breeder obtains outstanding, single-plant specimens which give promise of becoming sensational, new flower creations. This remarkable plant individual must be protected from contamination (cross-pollination) by neighbor flowers. So the breeder encloses it, as it grows, in a muslin cage.

If the plant is to mature properly and produce seed, however, its flowers must be pollinated, but only with the pollen grains of that plant itself. Scientists call this "selfing."

Pollination by hand of all the caged plants on a flower breeding plot would be long, tedious work, so Gordon Morrison, Ferry-Morse Seed Station hybridist, enlists the aid of the maggot. It is the maggot of the objectionable blowfly, moreover. Blowfly maggots in the pupae stage are placed in the flower cage, subsequently maturing into flies. The insects are extremely active and they fly from flower to flower on the caged plant, doing an excellent job of spreading pollen from one blossom to another. The plant then proceeds to produce its prized crop of seed.

Thus the low-despised maggots do their part to help make the world more beautiful. Even so, let's hope flower breeders find a way to put them out of existence after they have done their pollination chore.

Things to make

WE OFFER here two new cut-outs. Practical as well as decorative features are incorporated in the duck; decorative alone is the purpose of the sunbonnet girl. These designs, of course, are to be traced on wall-board, plywood or thin lumber. Jig, coping or keyhole saw may be used to cut them out, and when painted they become attractive ornaments for your lawn.

Outlines for the 19-inch duck and his "Keep Off Grass" sign are on pattern Z9086, 15 cents. A "Use Walk" sign is also given. In about 24-inch size, the ever-popular sunbonnet girl and her sprinkling can are on pattern Z9088, 15 cents.

Select one or both of these clever cutout figures. General cutout directions, as well as specific painting suggestions come with each pattern. Send order to:

A good deal of interest has been aroused in the community by the building program of the Tinley Park Methodist church. Interest has been heightened by the two signs which appear on either side of the main entrance of the new edifice on 173 place.

To the left of the door is a 4x5 foot replica of the church building which is being painted daily according to the funds raised. The portion painted indicates how much of the church has been paid for or underwritten. Many Tinleyites are making it a regular practice each evening to walk or drive by to see how much of the little church has been painted.

To the right of the doorway is a bulletin board which shows the names of those who have paid a part of the "Starting Fund" as well as those who have subscribed to the "Completion Fund," a drive for which is still in progress.

Several of the laymen of the church have assured Rev. Weeinerich that they are "in this thing to win." They say they are going to keep on their Subscription Refunding Plan until the entire cost of the church is underwritten.

The Subscription Refunding Plan merely means that members and friends are asked to save and loan to the church according to their ability. Repayment of loans is guaranteed by an endowment insurance policy placed on the life of each subscriber by the church and paid for out of funds which would have to be used for interest under any other financing program.

TINLEY SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

The First grade has three new pupils this week and they have started a new number book and social science reader this past week. Second grade is interested in raising petunias.

By JANICE BOERNER

Last week the Third grade visited the Tinley Park grain elevator. Mr. Brueggeman was a gracious host and demonstrated the steps the grain goes through from the farmers truck to the freight car. The tour proved very worthwhile. They plan to visit the Tinley Dairy and the Emil Bettenhausen dairy farm in the near future. These trips are made in connection with their study of Community Life.

Fourth grade is studying various types of poems. Fifth grade is making booklets on various types of communications. Seventh grade is studying Corn in Industry.

Eighth grade held its regular Achievement club meeting.

Friday, April 5, 1940, Kenneth Niemann, Betty Brunner, Russell Andres and Dorothy Schluter attended the annual Cook County Achievement convention at the Morrison hotel, April 1, 1940. An interesting program and a good time was reported by the delegates.

Miss Farrar's room had a candy sale, Wednesday, April 3. Many varieties were sold and a good profit was made.

The Achievement club will also hold a candy sale April 17.

A SEA-MAN SPEAKS

Do you hear those bells on the distant shore,
Calling the people to prayer?
'Twas in that little grey church on the hill
I learned to love a maiden fair.

But I went away to forget her,
I sailed on the blue, blue sea.
Tho I knew I'd ne'er love another—
And without her, I wouldn't happy be.

One day I went back to that maiden fair
To ask if she would be my own.
But I was too late, for a year before—
She had passed away, and I hadn't known.

They say that she died of a broken heart,
Because I had gone away.
Now whenever I hear the church bells chime
I think of her and say:

Don't go away, but always tell her,
Boys,
When you love a maiden fair,
Because you might also break her heart,
For it may be for you, she does care.

Mrs. Mildred Pierson of Elgin. Fire of undetermined origin Sunday afternoon destroyed a barn on the farm occupied by Edgar Dougherty, a mile and a half southeast of here. Dougherty said he noticed smoke issuing as he approached the barn to do his afternoon chores. He rushed inside, and noticing the flames had gained considerable headway, began removing the stock instead of calling for help. Neighbors who saw the smoke, however, came to the farm, and also notified the New Lenox telephone operator, who rang people with phones for help. They succeeded in bringing out to safety, seven cows and two horses. Four cows, seed and hay were destroyed with the barn, tools and implements. According to Dougherty, the property was fully covered by insurance. No estimate was made of the loss. The barn was an old building, and was known as the former Gene McCoy farm.

FARMERS WARNED TO TEST ALL OATS AND SOYBEANS SEED

Soybean seed and seed oats are germinating so poorly this spring that Illinois farmers can avoid the risk of crop failures only by making careful tests of their seed, according to a warning by J. C. Hackleman, crop extension specialist of the University of Illinois College of Agriculture.

The state annually grows some three million acres of oats and almost three million acres of soybeans for beans, hay and green manure, with the result that crop failures because of poor seed would mean disastrous losses, he pointed out.

Only 53 per cent, or a little more than half, of the seed in representatives soybean samples from 70 counties in all parts of the state, proved to be strong in germination tests made by the agronomy department of the college. Nineteen per cent, or almost one-fifth, of the seed was dead, 25 per cent of it weak and the remainder hard.

As for oats, preliminary tests indicate that many lots of seed will be disappointing if farmers wait to "test" them after they are in the ground, Hackleman said.

Adding to the seriousness of the soybean seed situation is the fact that it is general throughout Indiana, Ohio and other states. Within Illinois, itself, there was no evidence that any one section has soybeans superior to another section. Some samples tested out fairly well, while others ran 30 to 40 per cent dead seed.

DID HE?

That is why, when he traveled, His eyes were on the ground, For, his hobby was observation; He liked to look around.

He probably thought, he would find, Money, what was lost . . . This day, when he was looking, And, his eyes, he tosst, He caught a gleam upon the cinders Of shining, silver, money! He quickly stooped, and grabt it up, His face was widened with a grin, As, he homeward trod.

Later, in the evening, O- My Sacred Sod!! In the pocket of his trousers, He discovered a frightful hole; And the look upon his face Was a look of dole!

Then, he reacht for a word, His wife to vilify, But, he lost his grip, at The twinkle in her eye.

He turned away to a worried hour, Working with a dash, Making scrambled, frantic, efforts To balance his precious cash.

SUNDAY DINNER

Suggestions

VEGETABLES are the one food that are relatively scarce. Many of the new crops maturing in Florida have been injured by a new freeze and hail storm so that instead of abundance only slightly increased supplies will be available until other states begin producing. However, supplies of canned and frozen vegetables are generous.

Large turkeys are plentiful and cheap and when chosen for church or community suppers are an important drawing card, says Miss Cora Anthony of the A&P Kitchen. For that postponed dinner party or buffet supper turkey is also a good choice. Fowl, too, is unusually cheap and plentiful. New crop ducklings costs no more than last year's frozen stock did a few weeks ago.

Beef, fresh and smoked pork and veal are very reasonable in price but lamb prices are not so attractive. The fish strike still awaits settlement. Eggs are plentiful and low in price.

Here are three dinners at different price levels:

U. S. Farmer Puts Money in the Bank While City Folk End Up Behind 8-Ball

By OSCAR REGAN

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON.—Though his source of income is constantly threatened by natural and artificial disasters and he must support the nation's largest family, Mr. Average American Farmer manages to save more money than any other average man in the United States. What's more, technological trends will probably enable him to better his record for economy in the next few years—and get fat doing it.

A house-to-house survey of more than 1,000,000 farm, village and city families by the department of agriculture reveals that 42 per cent of the nation's farm families consist of five or more persons. Only 26 per cent of the village and city groups are that large, the average being slightly under three. Yet where income is from $1,000 to $1,250 a year, a farm family ends the year with a saving of $26 up, while city families of the same level wind up in a deep financial hole. Let a farmer get his hands on as much as $4,000 to $5,000 a year and he'll save almost half of it, the survey disclosed.

His Diet Is Better.

While watching his pennies, the farmer manages to eat more good things than other groups. His brood of five consumes 60 per cent more milk, 16 per cent more butter and 25 per cent more fresh vegetables than city families. Village families, incidentally, are shown by the survey to be the poorest fed in the land, some almost to the point of malnutrition, though an abundance of fresh and nourishing food is usually available nearby.

In fairness, however, the survey discloses that farmers do not have as many incidental expenses as their urban brethren. Less than half those questioned had electricity, while 98 per cent of city and village dwellers get monthly power bills. Only 52 per cent of the rural families had installed telephones as compared with 60 per cent for village and urban families.

More than 94 per cent of city homes were billed for running water, while in the north-central region of the United States only 24 per cent of the farms paid for that convenience. Furthermore, though 94 per cent of the farmers own automobiles as compared with only 70 per cent of the others, the agrarians buy three-fourths of their cars from the used-car market while more than half the city families buy new cars.

However, from one point of view, farm savings are menaced by the rapid spread of rural electrification. Within the past decade the benefits of electricity, according to the Rural Electrification administration, have been extended to 700,000 farms. In addition, the hard-surfacing of approximately 85 per cent of the nation's primary and secondary highways has brought the costly attractions of the city—beauty parlors, theaters, shops and department stores—closer than ever to the farm.

LORDING IT OVER CITY—Agriculture department survey shows farmer making $1,000 to $1,250 a year will save a little of it; city families with the same income wind up in a deep financial hole.

However, it is pointed out, such threats to farm bank balances are more than offset by technological advances which have cut farm production costs. Chief among these are small low-cost, all-purpose tractors which owe much of their time and fuel savings ability to the pneumatic rubber farm tires on which they have attained speeds comparable to those of the automobile. Designed specifically for work on the typical American farm of 100 acres or less, these rubber-shod machines have been found to cost a maximum of 34 cents an hour to operate on regular farm work, including depreciation, upkeep, interest, taxes and all other charges.

Replaces the Horse.

With government figures placing the cost of working one horse or mule at 15.4 cents an hour, the small rubber-equipped machines replace four draft animals which would cost a total of 61.6 an hour to work. Each hour, then, the tractor is saving at least 27.6 cents or $2.76 every 10-hour day, a sizeable addition to farm savings. Furthermore, P. W. Stansfield, farm service manager of the B. F. Goodrich company which pioneered the development of pneumatic farm tires, points out that the saving of approximately 24 working days on a 150-acre farm by the faster machines enables farmers to cultivate approximately 33 additional acres with resultant increases in income up to $600 annually. Thus, it is presumed that farm thriftiness, despite rising prices, will increase during the next few years.

Statistics on the cash income of farm families are peculiarly relevant to modern American problems. In New England, average net cash income for the group of farm operators' families studied was $769. In the central region, the average net cash income for the families studied extended from a low of $518 in Iowa to $1,202 in Illinois. Dust and drought disasters are reflected still in figures for the mountain and plains regions where the lowest net cash income was $207 for families studied in North Dakota. The high was $874 in Colorado, Montana, and South Dakota.

New Englanders Need More.

In the Southeast, white farm families in Georgia fared worst with an average net cash income of $449 for the year. Mississippi white farm operators fared best with an average net cash income of $1,566.

Many oddities were brought out in the survey. Despite their traditional thrift, New England villagers required an income of from $1,750 to $2,000 before substantial savings were made. The expenditures of low-income Southern farm wives and daughters for cosmetics and beauty parlors almost equalled those of the Pacific coast group where net cash incomes were highest. In Ohio and Pennsylvania, the farmer spent more on clothing per year than his wife, while in the Midwest men spent more in barber shops than their wives did in beauty parlors.

U. S. Watches Azores As Possible Threat To Atlantic Security

NEW YORK.—Direct flight of commercial airplanes between New York and the Azores islands, a distance of 2,000 miles, has again focused attention on the Azores as a potential aerial threat to American security.

Beginning this spring, two American transatlantic air services are making the 2,000-mile trip in a single hop, carrying mail and passengers. Military men see no reason why invading bombers could not make the same trip.

Thus the dreamy Portuguese islands in mid-Atlantic have assumed tremendous significance within a few short months, after 500 years of isolation and loneliness. They have moved within 15 hours of the Atlantic seaboard.

The islands have belonged to the Portuguese since their discovery in 1444. The United States holds no fear of invasion from the Azores so long as Portugal owns them, for the friendly relation of these two nations has continued unbroken since Colonial times. But it is not implausible to assume that an aggressor power may some day seize them.

Several military men have expressed this fear openly. In 1938, Rear Adm. Yates Stirling, former navy chief of staff, expected Franco Spain to capture Portugal.

Farley's candidacy as viewed from his personal angle . . . Congressional inquiries into sales of planes to allies really unimportant.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—James A. Farley is threatening to become a symbol. Not that Jim wants to be a symbol. Far from it. Jim wants to be nominated for President by the Democratic party he has served so faithfully and so successfully. Or, failing that, to be nominated for vice president.

Jim thinks he could win. Franklin D. Roosevelt, a little older than his postmaster general, doesn't think so. Not that the President would like to see Farley as his successor anyhow. He does not believe that Farley is a really enthusiastic New Dealer.

Farley is in danger of becoming a symbol because the strong probability is that he will not be nominated, either for President or vice president, and that a great many enthusiastic Farley men will be saying for the next few years that Farley was not nominated because of religious prejudice.

History has a way of repeating itself. In 1924, the Democratic party tore itself to pieces at Madison Square Garden over the religious issue.

IT MIGHT HAPPEN

In the summer of 1926 the writer was talking to an old friend who happened to be one of William G. McAdoo's lieutenants.

"We'll not only nominate the chief, we will elect him two years hence," he said.

"What's the use of talking like that, with all the hate you stirred up at Madison Square Garden?" I retorted. "You saw hates there that had been engendered at Baltimore, 12 years earlier, and this present one has religion in it. You won't get rid of it for a long time, so you can't win for a long time."

The McAdoo man stared off in the distance for a period of minutes. "I think you are right," he finally said. "I guess the best thing to do would be to nominate Al Smith next time. He'll take a terrible licking. Then we can nominate one of our fellows in 1932 and he will walk in."

The point of all this is that Farley is still very young. If they do throw him downstairs at Chicago, which seems probable, they may have to turn him in 1944. Stranger things have happened.

IT'S REALLY UNIMPORTANT

Demitasse storms is the proper description of the congressional inquiries into the selling of airplanes made in the United States to the allies. The notion that this government is being betrayed—is giving valuable military secrets to possible enemies—is just too absurd for words.

The most partisan of President Roosevelt's opponents must admit that little evidence can be brought against the President's contention that, if this country is to build up a formidable aircraft production, it must be permitted to produce airplanes good enough so that the allies will buy them!

It can not be denied, of course, that the administration is not displeased over the fact that, under our amended neutrality law, all the benefit goes to the allies. We will sell planes or munitions or ships to any belligerent if belligerent will come and get them, paying cash. The fact that only the allies can come and get them is a fortunate circumstance about which the administration is pleased.

But technically the President's argument would be just as defensible, and just as true, if it were Germany that controlled the seas, and were therefore the only belligerent able to come and get them.

BELLIGERENTS WOULD PAY

In addition, this capacity would be built up at the expense of the belligerents, for the price being charged for planes allows a considerable item for plant construction and depreciation, enough so that if the war runs on for any considerable period, the entire cost of all the new plants will have been written off—paid for by the belligerents. Incidentally, this is being done with the benevolent approval of the government agencies interested, including Henry Morgenthau Jr.

But the congressional investigations are small-time stuff for two other reasons. In the first place, if they are really conducted so as to get at the facts being alleged—that military secrets are being betrayed—they will be doing a swell job for Nazi espionage. This is only true, of course, on the assumption that the Germans do not know all about the so-called military secrets. Unless one assumes that, the whole thing becomes even more ridiculous, for the whole idea of military secrets becomes a joke.

ELMER SOUNDS A CALL

"I don't know no more than nobody else who will be the candidates for President this winter," declared Elmer Twitchell today, "but I would personally go for a sourpuss."

"A sourpuss?" the reporter asked, a little puzzled.

"Yes, sir," snapped Elmer, "a sourpuss. A deadpan candidate without a smile in his system. A fellow who can't photograph or screen well and who knows it. I am fed up with the old personality stuff in all public offices, and what is more I think a candidate with a severe mug and a what's-there-to-grin-over attitude might sweep the country."

"You don't mean that, Elmer," the reporter argued. "Everybody likes a radiant personality; everybody reacts to charm."

"Yeah," admitted Elmer, "and I'm for it, too, up to a point. But I think the personality theme has reached the point where the public is ripe for a swing the other way. This may be a sourpuss year."

Mr. Twitchell seemed quite serious about it.

"I like a genial, warm personality as well as the next man," he continued. "I am a sucker for charm, like the rest of the American public. Ordinarily I will vote for a man who screens well over a candidate who has nothing but efficiency to recommend him. Nine times out of ten I will go for the candidate with an appealing radio voice over the fellow for whom nothing can be said except that he would make a good President. But I now want a sourpuss. And for once I can be stumped by a candidate whose voice on the air sounds like somebody filing a saw."

"It's a very strange argument you are making, Mr. Twitchell," the reporter put in. "A smile and a radio voice are generally considered important assets in any campaign."

"That's what you think," barked Elmer. "I think there's a reaction."

And it gives me a pain in the blouse to observe all the candidates on all sides grinning from ear to ear, trying to look like personality-plus boys on the screen and trying to register as the Voice of the Year on the radio. I tell you that if I was a candidate for public office today I would have my picture taken only when I looked like I was having an argument with a taxicab driver, and I would open all my radio speeches with, 'Well, folks, I am a punk on the radio; I don't intend to bother acquiring a technique. All I expect to do is to quote facts and figures in a dull voice. This alone would make me a sensation.'

"You wouldn't get to first base as a candidate for inspector of manhole covers," the reporter insisted.

"Maybe not," said Elmer, "but I still think otherwise. And I hope I am right, because no country can stand government by personality and microphone charm indefinitely. Ultimately a sourpuss is necessary medicine. In fact, I am busy on the idea. I have already started organizing the Sourpuss for Presidential Clubs. No candidate with charm can even get close to us."

America's outstanding inventors were honored at a big banquet the other night. But nobody has yet loomed up who can devise a paper napkin that will stay on the knees at least through the soup course.

Never run the vacuum cleaner over loose tacks or other metal objects on the floor. They may puncture or cut the dust bag.

Try this fruit sauce on your favorite ice cream. Melt a cupful of jam or jelly in a double boiler. Add a fourth of a cup of orange juice. Serve the sauce warm.

After cooking carrots until tender put them through the ricer, and season and beat as one does mashed potatoes. Even those who refuse to like carrots cannot resist them thus prepared.

Do not soak flannels; it hardens them. Don't boil them; it shrinks them. Wash and dry quickly. Shake before washing, shake after washing and before hanging on the line.

A whole egg beaten into fresh-squeezed orange juice and dusted with nutmeg makes a nourishing drink for convalescents.

Soaking dough-encrusted bowls and dishes in cold water before washing them in hot, soapy water makes the task easier.

Corduroy garments should be washed in mild soapsuds and rinsed thoroughly in warm water before being hung up to dry.

When preparing oranges for a dessert, pour boiling water over them and let them stand five minutes. This will make them much easier to peel.

To remove brown marks from china put the articles in a saucepan with cold water and a lump of soda. Put the pan on the stove and let it boil for 15 minutes. Then rinse the china well and you will find that the marks have disappeared.

Driving Force

Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm.—Emerson.

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of worldwide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions.

These physicians, too, approve every word of advertising you read, the objective of which is only to recommend Doan's Pills as a good diuretic treatment for disorder of the kidney function and for relief of the pain and worry it causes.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!

Canada Fights 'Strangest War' With Industry Instead of Guns

OTTAWA.—When Canadian Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King won a vote of confidence in his special "war mandate" election in late March, it unleashed forces which permit continuance of the strangest war any nation has ever seen.

Having straight-forwardly declared war against Nazi Germany, Canadians find themselves forced to fight not on the western front but at home. Their weapons are industry and agriculture, not guns.

To be sure, one division of troops has already been sent abroad but this was more to pacify the Canadians than because Great Britain wanted them. There are already too many men on the western front and the allies are in greater need of economic resources.

To make it even more unusual, a large number of the Canadian troops sent abroad or held for training are American volunteers, of whom between 10,000 and 15,000 are said to have crossed the border since war began.

Unlike 1914, when hostilities brought feverish recruiting of men for cannon fodder and women for nursing and bandage-making, the war of 1940 finds Canada going along much as usual. Only a few select troops are accepted and they must pass rigid examinations. Women, no longer needed for bandage-wrapping and sock-knitting, are concentrating instead on saving food and working in offices and factories.

Nor is Great Britain demanding huge quantities of foodstuffs as in 1914. Canadian farmers, who expected such a rush, are left with bulging granaries.

As a source of war supplies and a training ground for allied aviation Canada is rapidly becoming so important that many believe it may be the British empire's most important industrial center when the war is over. Some 15,000 pilots from England, Australia, New Zealand and other parts of the empire are being given their final training in Canada.

The dominion is also manufacturing planes, shells and automobiles. Battleships may also be built there eventually, for Canada is now making smaller naval vessels.

As never before, Canada at war is emphasizing her financial independence from England, acting almost as a separate nation. Canadian securities held in England are being repatriated and $1,500,000,000 worth of Canadian-held American securities are being sold back to the United States.

The dominion is financing all munitions manufacturing herself, granting credits to Britain and earmarking her gold for Britain. When peace finally comes she will not only be independent of London but may actually be a creditor nation.

TALBOT MUNDY—WNU SERVICE

THE STORY THUS FAR

Captain Carl Norwood has been sent from his native England to the Kadur River district in India, along with his indispensable manservant, Moses O'Leary, soldier of fortune. Norwood's job is to survey the district to determine whether a valuable secret diamond mine belongs to the temple priests or to the ruler, the Maharajah of Kadur. Norwood calls on the British Residency to pay his initial respects. On his way he catches a glimpse of two women in a palace carriage, one of whom is young and beautiful. The other woman he knows to be the Maharanees of Kadur. O'Leary later tells him that the young woman is an American girl named Lynn Harding, who with her aunt, Mrs. Deborah Harding, is a guest at the palace. On a sightseeing tour Mrs. Harding sprains an ankle, and sends to the palace for aid. Prince Rundhia, handsome, spoiled nephew of the rulers, comes to her rescue, and takes her back to the palace where he meets Lynn. At a banquet that night in the palace, attended by Captain Norwood, Mrs. Harding takes one of the native doctor's pills, and becomes violently ill. She is placed in bed and arrangements are made for Lynn to move out of the quarters with her aunt and stay with the Maharanees. That evening Prince Rundhia attempts to make love to Lynn. She is unwilling to listen to him, and at the crucial moment Norwood appears on the scene, much to Rundhia's disgust. O'Leary has located the secret entrance to the diamond mine which is being worked by the temple priests. He takes Norwood to the mine, where death is narrowly averted when a live cobra is thrown in Norwood's face. Later Norwood visits the Brahmin priests, one of whom slyly slips a packet of diamonds in his pocket, unknown to Norwood. They are intended as a bribe. While Norwood is talking to Lynn the diamonds fall from his pocket. She notices them, and sees that he is surprised. Later, when Rundhia tries to make love to her, she mentions the diamonds in order to divert his mind. She realizes it was a mistake. Rundhia, though chagrined by Lynn's attitude, is elated to hear of the diamonds. He goes immediately to the British Residency, and tells the Resident of the diamonds.

"Rundhia, you are talking dangerously," said the Resident.

"Yes. Whose danger? It would smell sweet, wouldn't it? I was riding early this morning. I saw Norwood on his way to the river—overheard him say that priests were waiting for him near the river. And I happen to know he was down by the river after midnight last night. Now he carries diamonds in his tunic pocket."

"Have you seen them?"

"No."

"Who did?"

"I am well informed about it."

"Look here, Rundhia. You don't expect me, do you, to credit an unsupported charge, based on hearsay, against an officer who has a perfectly clean record?"

"Would you prefer that I take my information elsewhere?"

"Who was your informant?"

"I refuse to tell you."

The Resident rose from his chair: "I hope the drive home won't affect you disagreeably!"

Rundhia actually started for the door. As he drew abreast, the Resident said:

"Hello, I notice your nose is bleeding. Have you been in an accident?"

"Ask Norwood!"

"You mean to tell me—? Do you know where Norwood is now?"

"At the palace, in conference, perhaps fishing for a larger bribe from someone else."

"Now, now, Rundhia! Who was your informant about those diamonds?"

"I might tell you in strict confidence."

"I promise nothing. But I will believe nothing unless you tell me your informant's name."

"Between you and me, it was Miss Lynn Harding."

"How should she know?"

"She saw them. Norwood is in love with her."

"You know that?"

"Any fool could guess it. I think Norwood casually let her see them to impress her. He is mad about her. Don't quote me. It's up to you now."

CHAPTER IX

The Maharanees' maid, who changed Lynn's frock, was one of those who had been loaned to Aunt Harding, because she knew English. It was impossible not to believe that the Maharanees already knew more than the facts about Lynn's break with her aunt. The maid left the bedroom. The Maharanees sat by the veranda window, staring past the edge of the sun-blind into the garden. There was hardly a sound except the purring of the two electric fans.

Meanwhile, she smoked a cigarette and watched the Maharanees, who seemed to Lynn to be considering, not what to say, but how to say what was crowding her thought.

"Maharanees dear, I wish you wouldn't feel so upset."

"How you must despise us."

"Please! I don't. To go away leaving you thinking anything as untrue as that would be dreadful. I am not even angry with Rundhia."

"I am more than angry with him," said the Maharanees. "I am ashamed. Lynn, is it true—it has been told to me—that Mrs. Harding saw Rundhia kiss you in the garden?"

"Yes. That, too, was my fault. I could have prevented it. I knew Aunt Lynn was looking. I did it to annoy her."

"Not because you like Rundhia?"

"Oh, I like him. He is the handsomest thing I have ever seen, and amusing. I was playing with fire, I knew that."

The Maharanees' worried face relaxed into a wise smile: "My dear, you don't know Rundhia if you think he won't try it again! Unless—is it true—it has been told to me—that Mrs. Harding has decided not to stay here any longer?"

"First train, and first steamer for home," Lynn answered. "Marching orders. At the moment, it hurts her to move and she can't keep her head down. But the doctor can probably fix that. And she's brave. She has an iron will. She told me to pack my things."

"And will you do it?"

"What in the world else can I do? I haven't a sous marquis to my name. Aunt gives me pocket money—no more."

The Maharanees smiled: "Yes. Lack of money can make even Rundhia obey. But it is a limited power. It can be broken."

"So I think. But it remains to be seen," Lynn answered.

"You are of age? You don't look it, but you are, are you not? If I invite you to remain in the palace as my guest, will you accept?"

"How can I?"

"It would give me very great pleasure to provide you with more than pocket money. I can easily invent a salaried position. You have been such a comfort, such a joy to me, that your companionship would more than justify a requisition on the Maharajah's treasury."

"May I see you alone, sir?"

The Resident nodded. He didn't appear to enjoy the prospect. They went into the darkened library, and Norwood sat in the same chair that Rundhia had occupied. He laid the black paper package of diamonds on the table:

"Take a look at those, sir. I want to turn them over to you. I would like to get a receipt, and to make a statement in writing."

The Resident opened the envelope and poured the diamonds into his hand. He made a wry face and poured them back again:

"Nine?"

"I haven't counted them."

"They look valuable. Where did you get them?"

"I am not absolutely certain. I think they must have been slipped into my pocket, early this morning, by one of the unofficial representatives of the temple authorities, who met me by appointment, near the waterfall."

"What were you doing?"

"Inviting myself for a visit of inspection of the mine. They met me to discuss it."

"And you say they dropped these in your pocket?"

"I believe so. It's a pretty obvious attempt to bribe me to write a report in their favor."

"But they said nothing? Not even a hint?"

"One of them, I remember, did say he hoped my judgment wouldn't be affected by worthless arguments. He rather dwelt on the word worthless, but it made no special impression on me at the time."

"Very well, Captain Norwood, I will take your statement." The Resident glanced at his watch. "You're rather late with it. There seems to me to be needed some explanation when you called this morning."

"I didn't know, at that time, that I had them in my pocket."

The Resident's face was expressionless: "You had better be sure to include that in your statement. It's credible, of course, in view of your record. But people might draw inferences. Don't you think so?"

"You suggest, sir?"

"Nothing. I am offering advice."

"Well, perhaps I was mistaken."

His Highness my husband's exchequer. It is true—it has been told to me—that Mrs. Harding threatened to—my informant did not clearly understand—I think the word was disinherit?"

"Aunt has threatened that several times. Today I took her at her word," Lynn answered. "She will pay my fare home. After that, I go on my own way—earn a living. It was final."

"Can you legally be left without money?"

"I suppose so."

"You say you will earn a living. How? What can you do?"

"I don't know yet."

"For such a beautiful girl as you are there is always marriage to look forward to. Is Mrs. Harding not afraid of what people may say if she should leave you penniless until you marry?"

"She isn't afraid of people. Other people are afraid of her. She will simply say I was impossible. But I won't accept another cent from her. Maharanees dear, you can't guess. Perhaps I'm as ungrateful and bad as she says. But I know what I have had to endure. No more humiliation from Aunt Harding! I am through."

"Lynn darling, say nothing until you have thought. You haven't had time to think. And you are naturally prejudiced at the moment, even though you are so magnanimous and don't admit it. A greater magnanimity than yours I have seldom heard of. Lynn, the offer of a throne is not contemptible. Shall I write a note to Mrs. Harding saying you have accepted my invitation to stay with us?"

"Better let me tell her that," said Lynn. "Aunt would blow up. She isn't one bit pleasant when she's angry. Say you've invited me. How would that be?"

ted artfully evasive perjury. Norwood sat at the foot of the long table, looked, listened, and made endless notes.

They weren't half through by lunch-time. They gave him tiffin in the palace, all by himself, in a silent room, where a clock ticked as loud as fork against plate and he caught himself eating in time to the hypnotic beat, thinking of diamonds, Curried mutton and rice. Whiskey and soda. Sweet cakes. Fruit. Coffee. A cigar. And then back to the Council room to listen to more arguments that were interrupted by the arrival of Rundhia's Bengali physician, shepherding a servant who carried a big blue goblet on a plate.

The Maharajah swallowed his tonic and immediately became less nervous. Then he asked, in English, presumably for Norwood's benefit:

"How is Mrs. Harding?"

Norwood cared less than nothing about Mrs. Harding's feelings at the moment, but he couldn't help hearing the doctor's answer:

"She is not well. But I cannot persuade her to take medicine. She is petulant—very."

The Maharajah tried to seem incredulous of any lady's petulance: "Convey my solicitude."

Norwood managed to escape from the conference soon after that. He was away on the horse before the Resident woke up. He cantered to the Residency, where he had to wait in the office an exasperating fifteen minutes, until the Resident could be awakened from his afternoon snooze and could get tubbed and come downstairs.

"May I see you alone, sir?"

The Resident nodded. He didn't appear to enjoy the prospect. They went into the darkened library, and Norwood sat in the same chair that Rundhia had occupied. He laid the black paper package of diamonds on the table:

Norwood managed to escape from the conference soon after that. He was away on the horse before the Resident woke up. He cantered to the Residency, where he had to wait in the office an exasperating fifteen minutes, until the Resident could be awakened from his afternoon snooze and could get tubbed and come downstairs.

"May I see you alone, sir?"

The Resident nodded. He didn't appear to enjoy the prospect. They went into the darkened library, and Norwood sat in the same chair that Rundhia had occupied. He laid the black paper package of diamonds on the table:

"Take a look at those, sir. I want to turn them over to you. I would like to get a receipt, and to make a statement in writing."

The Resident opened the envelope and poured the diamonds into his hand. He made a wry face and poured them back again:

"Nine?"

"I haven't counted them."

"They look valuable. Where did you get them?"

"I am not absolutely certain. I think they must have been slipped into my pocket, early this morning, by one of the unofficial representatives of the temple authorities, who met me by appointment, near the waterfall."

"What were you doing?"

"Inviting myself for a visit of inspection of the mine. They met me to discuss it."

"And you say they dropped these in your pocket?"

"I believe so. It's a pretty obvious attempt to bribe me to write a report in their favor."

"But they said nothing? Not even a hint?"

"One of them, I remember, did say he hoped my judgment wouldn't be affected by worthless arguments. He rather dwelt on the word worthless, but it made no special impression on me at the time."

"Very well, Captain Norwood, I will take your statement." The Resident glanced at his watch. "You're rather late with it. There seems to me to be needed some explanation when you called this morning."

"I didn't know, at that time, that I had them in my pocket."

The Resident's face was expressionless: "You had better be sure to include that in your statement. It's credible, of course, in view of your record. But people might draw inferences. Don't you think so?"

"You suggest, sir?"

"Nothing. I am offering advice."

"Well, perhaps I was mistaken."

His Highness my husband's exchequer. It is true—it has been told to me—that Mrs. Harding threatened to—my informant did not clearly understand—I think the word was disinherit?"

"Aunt has threatened that several times. Today I took her at her word," Lynn answered. "She will pay my fare home. After that, I go on my own way—earn a living. It was final."

"Can you legally be left without money?"

"I suppose so."

"You say you will earn a living. How? What can you do?"

"I don't know yet."

"For such a beautiful girl as you are there is always marriage to look forward to. Is Mrs. Harding not afraid of what people may say if she should leave you penniless until you marry?"

"She isn't afraid of people. Other people are afraid of her. She will simply say I was impossible. But I won't accept another cent from her. Maharanees dear, you can't guess. Perhaps I'm as ungrateful and bad as she says. But I know what I have had to endure. No more humiliation from Aunt Harding! I am through."

"Lynn darling, say nothing until you have thought. You haven't had time to think. And you are naturally prejudiced at the moment, even though you are so magnanimous and don't admit it. A greater magnanimity than yours I have seldom heard of. Lynn, the offer of a throne is not contemptible. Shall I write a note to Mrs. Harding saying you have accepted my invitation to stay with us?"

"Better let me tell her that," said Lynn. "Aunt would blow up. She isn't one bit pleasant when she's angry. Say you've invited me. How would that be?"

ted artfully evasive perjury. Norwood sat at the foot of the long table, looked, listened, and made endless notes.

They weren't half through by lunch-time. They gave him tiffin in the palace, all by himself, in a silent room, where a clock ticked as loud as fork against plate and he caught himself eating in time to the hypnotic beat, thinking of diamonds, Curried mutton and rice. Whiskey and soda. Sweet cakes. Fruit. Coffee. A cigar. And then back to the Council room to listen to more arguments that were interrupted by the arrival of Rundhia's Bengali physician, shepherding a servant who carried a big blue goblet on a plate.

The Maharajah swallowed his tonic and immediately became less nervous. Then he asked, in English, presumably for Norwood's benefit:

"How is Mrs. Harding?"

Norwood cared less than nothing about Mrs. Harding's feelings at the moment, but he couldn't help hearing the doctor's answer:

"She is not well. But I cannot persuade her to take medicine. She is petulant—very."

The Maharajah tried to seem incredulous of any lady's petulance: "Convey my solicitude."

Norwood managed to escape from the conference soon after that. He was away on the horse before the Resident woke up. He cantered to the Residency, where he had to wait in the office an exasperating fifteen minutes, until the Resident could be awakened from his afternoon snooze and could get tubbed and come downstairs.

"May I see you alone, sir?"

"You suggest, sir?"

"Nothing. I am offering advice."

"Well, perhaps I was mistaken."

It might be inferred that you accepted these diamonds and said nothing about them until you learned, let us say at the palace, that someone knew about it; and that then you hurried to me in a rather belated attempt to establish innocence. I am simply pointing out to you what might be inferred if you are not particularly careful."

Norwood stared at the package of diamonds. He thought a minute. Then he looked straight in the Resident's eyes and spoke quite calmly:

"You appear to me to be hinting. Had you heard about these before I brought them to you?"

"Yes."

"Who was your informant?"

Law On the Farm

Liens for Storage and Repairs.—In 1921 the Illinois legislature enacted a law providing that "every person, firm or corporation who has expended labor, skill or materials upon any chattel, or has furnished storage for said chattel, at the request of its owner, reputed owner, or authorized agent of the owner, or lawful possessor thereof, shall have a lien upon such chattel beginning on the date of the commencement of such expenditures of labor, skill and materials or of such storage for the contract price for all such expenditure of labor, skill or materials, or for all such storage, or in the absence of such contract price, for the reasonable worth of such expenditure or labor, skill and materials, or of such storage, for a period of one year from and after the completion of such expenditure of labor, skill or materials, or of such storage, notwithstanding the fact that the possession of such chattel has been surrendered to the owner, or lawful possessor thereof." Garagemen and automobile mechanics form the largest class of persons benefiting from this law. A farmer who has work done in his automobile or tractor is subject to the lien.

Court have determined that a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract made prior to the time labor or storage is provided taken precedence over the lien created by this law. This means that when an automobile or tractor is sold to satisfy the debts of the owner, the sales agency or implement company holding a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract will receive payment on any balance due before a garageman will be paid for storage or labor. This lien may be enforced by foreclosure and sale.

The law referred may be found in the Illinois Revised Statutes, Chapter 82, sections 40-47.

...an Economical Way to Sow

FROM the back of your wagon box this seeder will sow a swath of wheat 40 to 52 ft. wide... of oats, 36 to 40 ft. . . of flax, 20 to 24 ft. . . of timothy, 20 to 24 ft. . . of clover, 24 to 28 ft. You can figure out for yourself how much land you can sow in a day at such rates.

This McCormick-Deering Endgate Seeder is driven by a heavy sprocket wheel bolted to the rear wheel of the wagon. The extra large grain hopper slants down over the wagon box so you can fill it easily without wasting seed.

A supplementary grass hopper can be supplied for use in sowing alfalfa, timothy, clover, and other grass seeds.

We think the No. 5 McCormick-Deering is the finest endgate seeder built. Wouldn't you like to come in and see it?
